Cosmo Cool

Cosmo is the coolest scientist in the Arctic. He is the only champion ice, snow and web surfer.

When he is not searching the ice for fossils, Cosmo loves to plough through the snow in the polar plough.

Sometimes he even carves our giant messages in the snow for airplanes and UFO's to see.

Captain Ross Ranger

As leader of the explorers, Ross loves to climb mountains and icebergs. Ross climbed one huge iceberg and became stranded. As it floated south, the iceberg started melting like a snow cone.

Left in the sun, Luckily, Crystal rescued Ross with the helicopter before the iceberg turned into an ice cube.

Crystal Aunt

Crystal is a native Inuit from Nunavut. Crystal has studied Arctic animals since she was a young girl. She is also in tune with the weather and is the team's no. 1 weather watcher.

Keep your Arctic expedition moving. The powerful plough ploughs a path through the biggest piles of snow in the Arctic! Its rubber treads keep you going over slippery ice and snow.

And for fun, it can clear a space for a hockey game. When you find a frozen fossil, scoop it up with the robotic all-terrain crane.

6569 Polar Explorer

Handy-Bell attaches to snowmobile.

I hope I find a fossil before a polar bear finds me!

Watch out for a surprise inside.

Looking for fossils in the icy Arctic can be dangerous. Put on your parka, hop in the snowmobile, and hit the ice. If you get stranded, your sled is loaded with survival gear. Radio the base, set up your emergency antenna, and watch out for polar bears!

6579 Ice Surfer

It is like surfing on ice cream, dudes.

The amazing Arctic. It is one of the coolest places in the world, especially in January when it is -33°F. Brrr! But the cold and snow cannot stop these tough polar explorers. Their cool-looking polar equipment can handle whatever Mother Nature dishes out.

Sail turns to catch the wind.

Slide and glide over the ice in this slick surfer.

Outpost opens and satellite rotates.

6520 Mobile Outpost

Grip with the hand winch.

Check out the polar bear!

Scooter

Wide skis let you go wherever you please.

Phew, that polar bear almost followed me back to camp!

Changes in the Arctic's weather affect the world. If too much ice melts, other lands will be flooded and polar bears will disappear. Hitch up the snow tracker and move the mobile lab all over the Arctic. Zoom around in a super-fast snowmobile for extra exploring. Or head out on snowshoes with your backpack, binoculars, and walkie-talkie. When the ice starts to break up, take off before you drift away.

Let's construct a highway bridge!

There is a lot of action going on at the construction site. The bridge is due for completion but there are still some challenges!

Rooooooooo

Hurry! This project should have been completed yesterday!

Where is the excavator?
Has Perry fallen asleep again?

Hey, Joe,
get your crane up! A new load of dirt has just come in!

Crash

Mind your heads!

The crane is moving!
Take cover!

Squeeeeeeeek

Get this road block off!
Anyone who drives up here
is going to get himself hurt!

Get the truck to remove the debris from the site!

Take five!
Who is going to fetch the refreshment?

I will go and get it.

Step it up boys!
We are almost there!
And then it will be
party time!

Wow! It is really hot today! I think I am going to melt.

Yeah! We will get to race this highway once it is completed.
After all, someone has to test drive it.

How do we get

To help protect knights from injury they used dull swords and lances with protective tips

In the days of olde, when knights protected their king's kingdom jousting was a popular event. At first, knights wanted a way to practice their fighting skills. They would form teams and charge at each other in a fake fight.

Jousts became the favourite contest to prove which knight was best. Knights from all over would travel to a joust to prove their strength and fighting skills. Soon jousting tournaments became popular sporting events - like the Olympics of the Middle Ages.

One type of jousting was called quintain jousting.
This is similar to the jousting in the #6095 Royal Joust. Instead of charging directly at an opponent, a knight would charge a target on a revolving pedest quintain). If he missed the target or was too slow in riding away, the jouster might get whacked by a sandbag tied to the other end of the contraption.

Believe it or not, these quintain jousting devices may have been the granddaddy of merry-go-rounds. Early merry-go-rounds had things to grasp at including a brass ring, you got a free ride!

Building Competition

Build your dream castle where King Richard and his royal family lives. It is also a place where all the brave knights gather to discuss strategies to protect royal family, the country and the interest of the people. The castle would also be equiped with bonby traps to fend off unwelcome guests to the castle such as warlords, evil wizards and thieves going after the Royal treasure.

Name your castle and send in a photograph of yourself and your castle to the following address by the 10th April 2000 to qualify for the contest:

THE PHARAOHS PLAYED THE WORLD'S OLDEST GAME!

Mancala is my favourite board game. I have been playing for almost 4000 YEARS, and I am pretty good!

If you are game, I will teach you the rules and show you how to build a Mancala set.

Find a LEGO base, a pile of LEGO bricks with which to build the actual board, and 48 one-stud bricks - we call them "stones" in Mancala.

Build six small chambers on each side of the two Mancala houses in the middle.

Each player has six chambers and a Mancala house.

Divide the "stones" into two piles so that you and your opponent each have 24 "stones".

Put four "stones" in each chamber.

You and your opponent have to move the "stones" from chamber to chamber in the direction of the arrow. Any of you can start.

You are only allowed to move "stones" from your own chambers. You have to move ALL "stones" from one chamber, each time.

Whenever you move "stones", you have to put a "stone" in each chamber.

Each time you pass your Mancala house you must deposit a "stone".

If your last "stone" ends in a chamber on your side of the board you can take all the "stones" from your opponent's opposite chamber and put them into your Mancala house.

The game ends when one of you has emptied all six of his or her chambers.

If he cannot move them into his house, the player who finished first gets all the "stones" left in his chamber.

Finally, you and your opponent count the number of "stones" you each have in your Mancala houses.

The player with the most "stones" is the winner.
